

Monthly Market Commentary

April saw global equity markets enjoy a very strong rebound, led by Technology and Growth stocks. Away from these areas, there was also broad-based strength.

Easing Middle East tensions were one factor fuelling risk-on sentiment, amid a flurry of diplomatic activity and ceasefire announcements. Other factors included renewed AI optimism, which has extended to supply chain beneficiaries.

Earnings season was also robust, with approximately 84% of S&P 500 companies, thus far, reporting an EPS beat, the highest level since mid-2021. S&P 500 earnings are now tracking +27% year-on-year, the fastest growth since Q4 2021, with all eleven sectors reporting year-on-year revenue growth. Notable share price reactions included technology giant Alphabet and construction equipment maker Caterpillar, an increasing beneficiary from the AI spending boom.

On a regional basis, Japan's Nikkei 225 surged 16.1%, driven by strength in technology and AI-linked stocks, most notably SoftBank, whose shares rose approximately 46% in April. US markets also delivered strong performance, with the tech-heavy NASDAQ up 15.3%, its best month since October 2002. The S&P 500 and S&P 600 Small Cap Index also rose by more than 10%. European bourses lagged in relative terms but delivered good absolute returns in local currency terms. Germany's DAX rose 7.1%, ahead of both the French CAC (+3.8%) and UK FTSE (+2%). China's Shanghai Composite Index also rose solidly, up 5.7% during the month.

Sectors heavily exposed to the AI ecosystem were the standout performers in April, with Information Technology and Communication Services up 17.5% and 16.3%, respectively. Consumer Discretionary also rose strongly, up 9.7%, while defensives lagged, with Utilities and Staples both up approximately 3%. Health Care and Energy were the only two sectors to finish down, falling 0.3% and 2.1%, respectively.

The AUD rose 4.4% against the USD, with the DXY Index falling 1.9% in April. Commodities were broadly strong, with the Bloomberg Commodity Index up 3.9% and WTI oil up 3.6% to close above $100 per barrel. Alongside equity market strength, the VIX fell 8.3 points to close at 16.9. Yields on 10-year US Treasuries rose 5bps to 4.37% by month-end.

Against this backdrop, the Fund returned -2.78% for the month.

UK-based distributor Bunzl was the largest contributor to performance in April. Shares benefitted from a well-received Q1 result in which full-year guidance was reaffirmed, along with signs that inflationary pressures are benefitting sales. US-based reinsurance group Everest was also a meaningful contributor after Q1 results showed solid reinsurance trends alongside a step-up in buyback activity. Given the stock continues to trade below book value, these are highly accretive ways to deploy capital.

Water boiler maker AO Smith was the largest detractor in April, with shares impacted by waning sentiment towards housing-exposed stocks and a weak Q1 result. Along with missing estimates, the group also downgraded full-year EPS guidance by approximately 4%, citing more cyclical weakness (residential volumes at their lowest since COVID). However, valuation support is notable (approximately 12x EBIT). Additionally, balance sheet risk is minimal (approximately 0.5x net debt/EBITDA), and the group continues to generate strong cash flows. Hence, we will continue to hold and think the stock has a fair value of approximately $73 per share (approximately 20% upside from current levels).
